Profit Is Least

Part of Increased Cost of Automobiles

There is an astonishing financial store behind today's high-priced automobiles, as told in the Automobile Manufacturers' association booklet, "190 Million Motor Vehicles."

The main theme is that the manufacturer's profit, not only is the least factor in today's high prices but the profit margin is precariously slim. I suppose the booklet was issued because the manufacturers got tired of hearing government propagandists tell how rich they were getting. In any event, the statistical story told by the carmakers is an eye-opener. Here are the facts as the manufacturers give them:

In 1929 automobile companies averaged 12.6 profit per dollar of income.

In 1932 they lost 6.7c on each dollar.

From 1937 through 1941 they made 7.4c per dollar, but through the war years 1942 to 1945 inclusive profits fell to 3c per dollar.

In 1946, the year of strikes and material shortages, the profit was 3.6c.

Last year, 1947, with inflation working on the whole country, the motor manufacturers earned 6.3c on the dollar, which was less than the 7.4c average for 1937-41. But the more important figure is that companies had to put back into the business 37% of their earnings. Actual dividends given stockholders in 1947 was 2.7c on each income dollar, as compared to 6.1c for dividends in 1937-41. In total actual dollars, the companies observed 1947 dividends equalled the 1937-41 average, but with the drop in the value of the dollar—say by all of us—the dividends were worth only half what they were in 1937-41.

Now here comes an astonishing set of figures:

The companies report that against an average profit per car in 1949 of $51 they made in 1947 $75 per car.

But the average 1949 car had an FOB factory price of $755, while the average 1947 car was priced at $1,500.

Of this $755 increase in the retail price only $24 was accounted for by manufacturer's profit.

"At least 97% of the price rise," the booklet continues, "was due to higher taxes, wages and material costs."

Few Americans believe anyone can be a deliberate villain and remain in business under our free and competitive system of enterprise. The motor manufacturers have come up with a statistical explanation for high prices which reduces some of the government spokesmen to mere shouting politicians.

Speeches don't bring prices down. As a matter of fact the record seems to show that they put prices up.

Liberal or Conservative Party? GOP Stands at the Crossroads By JAMES THRASHER

The loss of the presidential and congressional elections left the Republican Party a choice of two courses. It can liberalize its congressional leadership. Or it can continue under the conservative leadership that has long directed its policies in Congress and there run the risk of a still longer losing streak.

It has been insisted that the elections results would be the sign not for a shakeup, particularly in the Senate. But now a story from Washington says that a move in that direction has broken down almost as soon as it started. The liberal GOP senators, it seems, could not agree on a leader.

There are several intelligent, experienced and forward-looking men in this liberal group. One might think from a collection of such names as Alfalfa, Flanagan, Sargent, Stassen, Lodge, Tamm, Morse and Knowland, somebody might have grounds who would grab a new leadership position to work. Then reported inability to agree on a specific course in view of the findings of the lower court gave erroneous reasons why the liberal Republicans should pull together.

If the Senate housecleaning has really been abandoned, a good many people are going to be disappointed. It won't remove the more liberal Republicans, certainly. It won't offer much hope to the faithful party members of conservative opinion who nevertheless would like to see the GOP get back on the winning side by any means. It won't even please those with no strong party feelings who want to see a more systematic system kept in action.

Unless the GOP liberals get together and try again, the big decision will certainly lie in to Senator Taft. The big-wheel in their cockpit. He has not yet revealed what his party's surprising defeat signifies to him, or what he intends to do about it.

One thing is certain. Senator Taft will die in his own cockpit. Though his political philosophy clearly represents a minority view, he sincerely believes in it. He is obviously honest and intelligent. His actions are dictated by his beliefs, whatever one may think of the reasoning behind them. The question now is whether with recent developments in the Senate, the majority of Republicans in the press support both platform and candidates.

If Mr. Taft does not believe that he must resign his congressional post in favor of Senator Vandenberg, for Mr. Vandenberg is a good, strong, able man, he is bound to do so. He has a broad base of popular leadership with the American public in the field of foreign affairs. The entire task could be possible in the domestic field without sacrifice of the party's individuality or integrity.

As one writer put it, the Republican Party cannot expect to win by running a liberal presidential candidate on a liberal platform for three reasons: (1) you gotta win; (2) in the intervening time the majority of Republicans in the press support both platform and candidates.

If Mr. Taft does not believe that he must resign his congressional post in favor of Senator Vandenberg, for Mr. Vandenberg is a good, strong, able man, he is bound to do so. He has a broad base of popular leadership with the American public in the field of foreign affairs. The entire task could be possible in the domestic field without sacrifice of the party's individuality or integrity.

Admission to the concerts is by membership only, there being no ticket sale at the door.

Seamen Back at Work on West Coast

San Francisco, Dec. 6.—(UPI)—Seamen and dockworkers return to work today at 23 Pacific coast ports, ending a three-month strike that idle 30,000 men and 105 ships.

Employers and CIO longshoremen called for work to resume in all ports at 3 a.m. The stevedores will have to move a three-month backlog of cargo oil strikebound ships.

Marine Interests yesterday board some of the ships to get steam up on the engines for cargo working. CIO marine cooks assigned stevedores to move a three-month backlog of passengers for the occasion.

Defense counsel argued several times x x x by other witnesses, tended to show that Davis and (Gerald) Mays made an unprovoked assault on Appellant, striking him with beer bottles and that Appellant fled from them to get his pistol that he might repeat their attack."

Mr. Newbolds, the defendant, was charged with shooting W. L. Davis and Gerald Mays at the "Brown Pig" in Paragould the night of Oct. 6, 1947.

He was tried in Greene circuit court for first degree murder in the death of Davis, was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to two years. It was this sentence which the supreme court affirmed.

The court's opinion related that nearly a year previously Davis and Warner Mays, brother of Gerald, had been involved in an altercation with Newbolds at the tavern.

At that time Newbolds was beaten with beer bottles, and he shot and killed (Gerald) Mays.

On the double killing the supreme court commented:

"Appellant's (Newbolds') testivoked assault on Appellant, striking him with beer bottles and that Appellant fled from them to get his pistol that he might repeat their attack."

(Gerald) Mays made an unpro-

Election of Truman to Be Made Official

Washington, Dec. 6—(UP)—One week from today, 531 electors meet at the various state capitals to pick the next president of the United States.

The electors, like everyone else, know that Harry S. Truman was the nation's choice at the polls on Nov. 2. Nevertheless, a complicated ritual provided by the constitution and acts of congress will be closely observed to make it official.

It will all wind up Jan. 20 when Mr. Truman takes the oath of office here on the capitol's east portico.

There is a chance that this will be the last time the electoral process will work as it now exists. There are many in congress who believe it is "archaic" and who favor a constitutional amendment to make basic changes.

Each state is allowed one presidential elector for every one of its representatives and senators in Congress. When John Citizen went into the polling booth on election day he didn't vote for Mr. Truman or Gov. Thomas E. Dewey. He voted for a slate of electors pledged to his particular candidate.

The electors, in turn, will get their chance to cast their official votes next week. Usually, they vote as instructed by the people of their states on election day. But this year there is talk that some electors named to vote for Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the States' Rights candidate, may switch to Mr. Truman.

Aside from their brief duties next week, about all the electors get out of it is a free reserved seat at the inaugural ceremonies here next month, but they must pay their own expenses for the trip.

At present, the candidates winning the largest popular vote in a state gets all of that state's electoral votes. Some congressmen both parties are talking of an amendment whereby the electoral votes would be divided among all candidates in proportion to their popular vote.

Once the electors vote next week each state will prepare six official copies of its count. These are filed at specified intervals with certain state offices, the secretary of state in Washington, federal district judges and Senate President Arthur H. Vandenberg.

Congress decreed the wide distribution as insurance against theft or loss.

The next step comes on Jan. 6, at exactly one p.m. EST. The law requires the vote to join the house in the house chamber at that time for the formal counting of the ballots. Vandenberg will preside.

The roll of states will then be called beginning with Alabama and continuing alphabetically. Vandenberg will open the communications from the state governors and read the vote. When the roll call finally gives Mr. Truman a majority—or 266 votes—for the first time he's really elected.

Mayer paid a former wife $3,250,000 to divorce him after 4 years of marriage. It was Miami-born Mrs. Danker's third trip to the altar.

Reds Claim Encirclement of Big Force

Nanking, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Chinese Communist radio reported tonight that Red forces had completed "an air-tight encirclement" of the Nationalist former Suchow Garrison in the developing battle for Nanking.

The garrison, comprising some 10,000 combat troops in the 16th, 18th, and second army groups abandoned Suchow last Wednesday in an effort to reach the trapped government 12th Army group in the Suhsien sector, about 45 miles to the south.

If the Communist claim is true, it means that only the government troops on the New Hwai river defense line enjoy freedom of movement in the region. The line was set up in 1938, 100 miles northeast of Nanking, but is maintained by relatively inferior troops.

The Red broadcast boasted that 20,000 government troops had been "annihilated" and added:

"If these troops refuse to surrender very soon, they will be entirely wiped out before long."

The Suchow garrison has been delayed in its southward march by Communists between 10 and 25 miles of the captured city.
